Plant Breeders have always managed large amounts of phenotypic data. Parallel biotechnological and computational developments, however, are opening new possibilities for the analysis of this data. This year’s speakers will explore methods that capitalize on these possibilities and provide new opportunities for crop improvement.